THEY are grease monkeys who really know their nuts — and bolts and screws — and they are so-o tired of being dissed “bad woman driver!”

So step on it guys, should you pull up alongside female drivers Jacqueline Lim, Lynn Tan or Wong Siew Lee.

These girls burn serious rubber and will leave you behind in a cloud of exhaust before you can even think, “lady driver!”

Jacqueline, 23, is just one of a growing group of women in Singapore who are car fanatics and who know a thing or two about handbrake turns, 180-degree spins and powerslides.

As the editor of motoring magazine Torque, it's her job to know more than just how many “rrrs” there are in “carburettor”.

Love of driving is what fuels her and the 276-horsepower Subaru Impreza WRX STi she takes round the Pasir Gudang race track in Johor.

“My dad has always liked performance cars, so I guess it runs in the family,” she said.

Another driver who prefers to prove her mettle, and metal, on the race tracks is final-year
